ASIA VIDEO INDUSTRY ASSOCIATION

What is AVIA

The Asia Video Industry Association (AVIA) is the trade association for the video industry and ecosystem in Asia Pacific. It serves to make the video industry stronger and healthier through promoting the common interests of its members. Understanding global trends in media, AVIA is focused specifically on addressing issues in the video markets of Asia.

Policy the interlocutor for the video industry with governments across the region

Piracy dedicated to reducing video piracy through the Coalition Against Piracy (CAP) and creating a more sustainable business environment for established as well as new video companies to innovate and grow

Insight a leading resource of intelligence and information on trends and developments in the video industry in Asia, through publications, newsletters, conferences and seminars

Who We Are & What We Do

- AVIA is the association for all connected with the video ecosystem in Asia.
- AVIA exists to make the video industry in Asia stronger, healthier, more vibrant, and to foster innovation in the industry.
- AVIA has a large and diverse membership and is a “must join” association for anyone connected to the video industry.
- AVIA reaches out – and is relevant – to staff at all levels in member companies. All employees of member companies are considered as our members.
- AVIA brings the industry together to allow challenges that are common to all to be faced together.
- AVIA speaks for the industry with one voice in consultations and dialogues with regulators and government bodies across Asia Pacific.
- AVIA is taking a leading role in developing tangible and measurable actions to reduce the effect of video piracy and works collaboratively with similarly like-minded organisations.
- AVIA will provide leading industry information and intelligence on developments in different markets, on developments in business models, and developments in technology for the video industry.
- AVIA is regional in focus, but with strong membership in every Asian market and active regular engagements in each market.

Heritage and Evolution

In 2018 AVIA evolved from CASBAA, which had been established in 1991 at the birth of the pay TV industry in Asia; a time when video was primarily distributed and received through cable and satellite. Today, the video industry has evolved and while linear pay TV, cable operators and satellite providers are still a big and important part of the industry, it equally encompasses all those who produce, curate, and distribute video content in whatever format, to whatever device, and the entire ecosystem that surrounds the video industry.

Policy

The Voice of the Video Industry

AVIA speaks on behalf of professional video and those who help consumers access it. Creation, transmission, distribution, technology – every aspect of the industry depends on making governments understand that the old rules of legacy broadcast regulation cannot be applied to an industry that is converging and transforming to meet the needs of the 21st Century.

Reaching governments across Asia with this message is a huge task, and AVIA relies on its members for side-by-side advocacy. But the single voice for broad industry interests is AVIA.

Tools

AVIA's toolkit includes:

- | | |
|----------------------------------|---|
| Direct advocacy | with governments, via submissions, statements, and white papers that members play a direct role in shaping. |
| Face-to-face interactions | with AVIA members joining government officials in policy roundtables, door-knocks in capitals, and small group interactions. These bring regulatory officials into contact with the dynamism of the industry, let them rub shoulders with executives from national markets and from regional corporate centres, and create opportunities for cross-pollination of ideas and mutual sharing of concerns. |
| Media outreach | to generate broader understanding of our key issues. Apart from seeking reform of traditional regulatory policies, AVIA supports tightening of national laws and anti-piracy enforcement to improve the business climate for professional video. |
| Research and education | with regular "country seminars" held in national capitals. These bring the international video industry to Asian markets and facilitate interchanges between operators "on the ground" and their colleagues in regional centres. AVIA's "Regulating for Growth" series of studies and publications helps members, regulators, and industry observers understand the ground rules for operating in Asia Pacific video markets. |

Results

Within recent years, AVIA's advocacy has played a key role in:

- The decision by Thai authorities to allow the professional video industry (beyond terrestrial broadcast) to support its work using advertising revenues. This produced a huge increase in video production and transmission in Thailand.
- Implementation of Singapore's "cross-carriage" rules in ways that minimised their negative impact on contracting for premium content in the video industry.
- Vietnam's gradual opening to international video content, including a key decision not to impose burdensome translation requirements on international news channels.
- Repeated resolutions and decisions by the ITU to preserve vital C-band spectrum for use by satellite networks and broadcast content distribution in Asia, where unique conditions – very different from those in other hemispheres – shape the regional video economy.
- India's world-leading decision to mandate rapid digitalisation of its cable TV industry, and to preserve a light-touch licensing regime for TV channels.

Piracy

Coalition Against Piracy

The Coalition Against Piracy (CAP), launched in October 2017, and adds full-time anti-piracy enforcement activities to the policy, information, and IP advocacy activities that CASBAA had successfully been undertaking for many years.

The focus of CAP is to combat infringing streaming sites and illicit streaming devices (ISDs) and apps which facilitate massive piracy of movies, sports, TV series and other creative video content. The ISD and app ecosystem is fast becoming the 'perfect storm', impacting all businesses involved in the production and distribution of legitimate content. The ISDs technological ecosystems allow for the efficient streaming of hundreds of unauthorised live TV channels and video-on-demand (VOD), whilst presenting no obvious single point of attack from a law enforcement perspective. The CAP programme is targeted – we believe that with limited resources we must focus on a limited set of priority markets. Those markets currently comprise the major SE Asian countries Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Thailand, Vietnam, Taiwan and HongKong.

Mitigating the piracy threat requires international cooperation and CAP provides added support for the content and distribution companies in the world-wide fight against piracy.

CAP has worked collaboratively with similar initiatives and associations underway in other parts of the world, including the newly formed Alliance for Creativity and Entertainment (ACE), the Audio-Visual Anti-Piracy Alliance in Europe (AAPA) and the IPTV Task Force.

For industry initiatives and actions to be successful, the cooperation of technology platforms and other intermediaries is essential. Working alongside e-platforms and social media sites where ISDs are commonly traded, as well as disrupting illicit commercial transactions, are key components of any anti-piracy strategy. As such, CAP has developed a productive working relationship with the most popular e-platforms and financial processors in SE Asia and has in place a successful 'rolling' intermediary strategy aimed at reducing the online trade of ISDs through both proactive and reactive measures.

Monitoring the extent of ISD penetration and being able to provide governments, law enforcement agencies and the media with credible data is also a key strategic component of CAP. Monitoring such consumer data also provides tangible evidence of whether the in-country anti-piracy strategies are indeed working. CAP works with credible and cost-effective consumer research companies to elicit such data which also folds into their targeted media strategy.

Committees

Committees are an invaluable way for a broad spectrum of people from different member companies to come together to play important roles in discussing and improving key issues for the video industry.

Under AVIA, the number, focus and structure of the Committees will evolve. Currently, AVIA manages the following committees:

Premium Video Advertising Committee

The objective of the Premium Video Advertising Committee is to support the advertising ecosystem around premium streaming video services. Objectives include defining premium, setting standards and best practices and the measurability of ad effectiveness.

Regulatory & Anti-Piracy Committee

A priority for the Regulatory & Anti-Piracy Committee is to pool collective information to tackle regional pay TV signal piracy. This Committee also plays an active role in coordinating the Association's advocacy and education activities in Asia.

Research Committee

The Research Committee recognizes the need for high-quality and compatible TV-focused media research and works to educate users of research data on how to use the information effectively.

Satellite Industry Committee

The Satellite Industry Committee has the remit to examine pan-regional regulatory affairs and lobby on behalf of the industry, as well as promoting satellite communications to the investment community, the media and telecommunications networks users.
